Sharing: Meaningful Participation of Children and Young People:

The Lundy Model

I've recently attended a Practitioner's Conference called Making Participation Work and learned of the Lundy model (next slide).

This model is to inform our understanding of child rights-based participation for both policy and practice.

Interestingly, I've found that our co-production work with Young People, e.g. Speak Up Forum, is also applying this participation model.

The Lundy Model has been used and adopted by national organisations and governments. In Barking and Dagenham, we are committed to listening to Young People's voices and enabling effective youth participation in decision-making. Our Young People, including the most vulnerable and marginalised ones, are not just at the table but to talk at the table, have their voices heard and opinions respected.
